Specialist Was Explorer In Tropics, Lived It Up

Dr. Morton Charles Kahn, explorer, bacteriologist, and public-health specialist, died, in New York, at St. Vincent's Hospital. His age was 63 years. At his death, Dr. Kahn was chief bacteriologist at St. Vincent's. Before joining St. Vincent's in 1955, he had been connected with the Cornell University Medical College for thirty-five years.

During his career, Dr. Kahn was often in the news as an explorer. He also helped to develop the lure sound trap for the destruction of disease-bearing mosquitos, says the New York Times. On his return from a scientific expedition to the wilds of Dutch Guiana in 1926, Dr. Kahn reported that, according to the testimony of natives, Paul Redfern, a missing aviator, might be alive.

Mr. Redfern had vanished over a South American jungle in August, 1927, while on an attempted nonstop solo flight from Brunswick, Ga., to Rio de Janeiro in a Stinson Detroiter monoplane. Dr. Kahn said there was reason to believe that Mr. Redfern was living among the tribes in the primitive interior. The aviator was never found.

Dr. Kahn and his associates at Cornell developed their lure sound trap from the discovery that the buzzing of the female mosquito, amplified many times, attracted male mosquitos. The trap was essentially an electrified cage equipped with loud-speakers over which recordings of the female buzzing could be played. Lured by the sound, the mosquitos flew to the cage only to be electrocuted there.

Pursuing his experiments, Dr. Kahn found that a mosquito emits sounds characteristic of its species. This meant that disease-carrying mosquitos could be identified by their calls. In Cuba, Dr. Kahn put this knowledge to practical use by trapping countless malaria-carrying mosquitos.

Dr. Kahn spent many years, on and off, in the tropics studying the mosquitos that spread malaria, dengue, yellow fever and filariasis. In parasitology, he made special studies of amoebic dysentery and hookworm disease, says the New York Times. His field trips took him to Costa Rica, Honduras, Gold Coast and British and Dutch Guiana.

After graduation from Cornell in 1916, he received a master's degree from Columbia University in 1917 and a doctorate in microbiology at Cornell in 1924. He later received a D. Sc. degree at the University of Havana School of Medicine.

Dr. Kahn began his association with the Cornell University Medical College in 1919 as an instructor. He became an associate professor of public health and preventive medicine in 1934. He also served as head of the department of parasitology of the New York

U.S. Jewish Farmers Hold On To Land, Get Loans

Jewish farmers in the United States are "tenaciously holding on" to their land in spite of the continuing decrease in the number of farm operators through mechanization and amalgamation, the Jewish Agricultural Society reported. Theodore Norman, general manager of the Society, said his agency was going ahead with its task of settling Jewish families on farms in the Northeast and California, says the New York Times. He announced in the annual report plans for the formation of cooperatives to assist Jewish farmers in marketing their products.

The Society last year assisted established farmers through technical aid and loans. Mr. Norman said Jewish farmers faced great problems in the present low egg prices and slim financial reserves.

Reviewing the history of Jewish farmers in California since their families settled there in the Gold Rush a century ago, the Society reported that California ranked second to New Jersey in the number of Jewish farm families. However, the dollar value of the produce of their farms was first by a wide margin, it added.

Trend To Liberal Judaism Is Noted In Young Israelis

A liberal concept of Judaism is beginning to cause widening ripples in Israel's sea of Orthodoxy. Although this new pattern of Judaism is not comparable to the practices of Reform Judaism in the United States, it is nevertheless, a sharp cleavage with rigid Orthodoxy, the religious force in Israel.

This emerging liberalism is finding strong favor with Israel's younger generation, particularly the Sabras (native-born Israelis) and those who settled in Israel from English-speaking countries, according to the New York Times. It has begun to attract adherents from Israel's non-religious parties. There are still no synagogues for these liberal worshippers to meet in on religious holidays and to hold services for the Sabbath. But they do meet in groups — in homes and in rented halls — for the observance of the holidays.

In the United States, the Reform branch emphasizes the evolving character of Judaism and the continuous interpretation of religious law in accordance with the needs of modern Jewish life. Orthodoxy maintains the binding authority of Jewish religious law and insists upon its immutable character.

In Israel, the liberal trend is still steeped in Jewish tradition. However, it is far less rigid than Orthodoxy. Men and women sit together at services. This is forbidden by Orthodox rabbinical leaders. But the men, unlike Reform worshippers in America, wear the "Yarmulke" (the traditional skull cap).

The only organized educational institutions in Israel devoted to this liberal practice is the Leo Baeck School in Haifa. It was named in honor of Rabbi Baeck, a liberal rabbinical leader in the pre-Hitler era in Germany. The school receives strong financial support from the Reform movement in the United States, says the New York Times, from the American Board of the World Union for Progressive Judaism, which Rabbi Baeck had headed, the Central Conference of American Rabbis' Committee on Projects for Israel, and the National Federation of Temple Youth, the

N.Y. Boy, 17, First Of 114,297, Gets Perfect Score In Math Contest

A seventeen-year-old senior at Brooklyn Technical High School turned in a perfect score in a nationwide mathematics competition to lead the city's public high schools in a clean sweep of the top three places in individual and team categories. The board of education announced that David M. Segal, of 110-21 73rd Road, Forest Hills, Queens, took first place among a record 114,297 students from 4,166 secondary schools in the United States, Hawaii, the Canal Zone, American Samos, Guam and Canada, says the New York Herald Tribune. His perfect score of 150 is the third in the ten-year history of the competition.

The contest involved an examination March 5, in which contestants answered fifty questions based on the concepts and skills of plane and simple co-ordinate geometry, elementary and intermediate algebra, arithmetic and informal space notions. It is sponsored jointly by the Mathematical Association of America and the Society of Actuaries.

David M. Segal, discovered mathematics at the age of eight years when he found an algebra text interesting reading, says the New York Times.

Now he is the only one of 144,297 secondary school students to attain a perfect score in a difficult mathematics competition held nationally each year. It was only the third time in ten years that a perfect score had been made.

At his home at 110-21 Seventy-third Street, Forest Hills, the Brooklyn Technical High School senior acknowledged he had not found any of the fifty tough questions particularly difficult. "But there wasn't a great deal of time," he said. "We only had eighty minutes which comes to less than two minutes a question." He scored 150 points out of a possible 150.

"Actually," he explained, "there was some confusion over one of my answers, but the school checked with the Mathematical Association of America and they found the official answer sheet had a typographical error."

The association and the Society of Actuaries design the annual competition. This year's dealt with plane and coordinate geometry, algebra and informal space notions. "Two years ago," David recalled, "I placed fifth, and this year was the fourth time I had competed."

Next fall he will enter Harvard, where he will study pure

Hitler Test Of German Youths Dismays Educators

A television crew took camera and microphone into scores of West German classrooms recently and what they recorded reverberated through the Federal Republic. They found that nine of every ten students fifteen to seventeen years old either knew nothing about Hitler or believed that on the whole he had done more good than harm.

"There is something rotten in German schools," Die Welt of Hamburg commented, says the New York Times. The president of the Permanent Conference of West German cultural ministers announced that the organization would examine the problem at its next meeting.

The show, televised from Frankfurt disclosed not only widespread ignorance of the Hitler era but also what Die Welt described as the "depressing" fact that students know little of Germany's present situation, its borders and the political system in East Germany.

The students were asked, "What do you know about Hitler?" One in ten gave what was considered a knowledgeable reply, such as that Nazism was a "concoction of the anti-Semitic nationalist and socialist beliefs latent in the German people at that time."

But for every one of these answers, the television crew encountered nine that have set German educators' hair on end, says the New York Times. "Hitler revived Germany," one student said. "He did away with unemployment and built the autobahns."

Another said: "After the war, people said everything he did was bad and they pointed to ruin and chaos everywhere. But now people come again and say it was not so bad after all."

Israel Delays Compulsory Loan To Finance Immigrants As Influx Fails

The Knesset (Parliament) has decided to postpone indefinitely collection of a compulsory loan that was to have helped finance the integration into Israel of 80,000 immigrants in the next eleven months. This decision indicated that the Government had finally given up hope that the large number of Rumanian Jews expected to arrive this year would be permitted to come, says the New York Times.

The loan was scheduled to be collected beginning in April. But by the end of February the number of Rumanian immigrants had dropped to a comparative handful. During the first three months of 1959 a total of 11,864 immigrants arrived, most of them from Rumania and elsewhere in Eastern Europe. In April and May the combined total, according to the Jewish Agency for Israel, was "less than 5,000."

Despite this drop in immigration, Finance Minister Levi Eshkol had planned to go ahead with the collection of the loan. He contended that these additional funds were desperately needed to finance housing projects already started for the expected newcomers, plus those being built for other immigrants still living in temporary quarters.

Although some parties in the Government coalition favored this, there was opposition within the Government as well as among the Opposition parties. As a compromise the Knesset gave its Finance Committee the power to decide when and at what rate the loan should be collected. Payments on the loan of £40,000,000 Israeli ($22,200,000) were to be deducted from the salaries of all but the lowest wage earners.

The budget already adopted for the current fiscal year beginning in April was supposed to provide for 40,000 new immigrants. The loan was to provide for 40,000 more. But unless there is a sudden upturn in the monthly rate of new arrivals the total will probably not exceed last year's, when 26,630 came to Israel.

Meanwhile the Jewish Agency for Israel, the action body of the World Zionist Organization, has submitted its budget for the current fiscal year, providing the same amount for immigration as was spent last year. However in its annual report to the Zionist General Council, the agency stated that immigration from other countries had been slowed to make room for the expected Rumanians, says the New York Times. The agency added that it was now "facing difficulties" in resuming this planned influx from other areas.

The Jewish Agency, using funds raised by various Zionist groups throughout the world, organizes and finances the bringing of most immigrants to Israel. It also finances the establishment of settlements to house and employ them.

The Death Of Barney Barnato Over Sixty Years Ago

The following account of the news of the death of Barney Barnato is taken from the London Jewish Chronicle of 18th June, 1897:

London, and especially the Stock Exchange, was startled on Tuesday (15th June) by a telegram from Funchal, Madeira, announcing that Mr. Barney I. Barnato had committed suicide by throwing himself overboard from the Union liner "Scot" while on the homeward voyage, and that the body had been recovered.

The "Scot" left Cape Town on the 2nd inst., with Mr. and Mrs. Barnato and their children and a nephew, Mr. Solly B. Joel.

The news of Mr. Barnato's tragic end came as a great shock to everyone in Pretoria, as well as in South Africa generally, both in official and popular circles. The tidings were communicated on Tuesday to the House of Assembly in Cape Town, where they were received with general regret. Sir John Sivewright, the acting Premier, read a cablegram from Sir Gordon Spring, who is also on board the "Scot," announcing the sad event.

Mr. Barnato had a most extraordinary career. He was of the humblest origin. He was born on 5th July, 1852, and in his youth lived in Spitalfields, very near the Jews Free School. His real name was Barney Isaacs, his father having been Mr. Isaac Isaacs. His mother was a distant relative of the late Sir George Jessel, and he himself was a cousin of Colonel Harris of Kimberley, who has won many laurels by his prowess. The name Barnato was added by the sons nearly 30 years back.

While speaking of his earlier life, it may be recorded here that when prosperity came to him he did not forget his relatives and old friends. Particularly the former he supplied the means of living on a better scale than they had been accustomed to and amid different surroundings.

But he had a relative, well known in Petticoat Lane as Polly Nathan, who was so happy with the people with whom she had been brought up that she refused to leave the neighbourhood, and to this day she keeps a fried-fish shop in Middlesex Street. Here she was frequently visited by Mr. Barnato, and especially on the carnival night into which "Chometz Battel Night" (the evening before Erev Pesach) has been transformed in the Lane.

Barney Barnato evinced early in life a taste for theatricals and conjuring. It was in 1872 that he determined to woo fortune in South Africa. He voyaged to Cape Town, and from there he took passage en route to Dutoitspan (as Kimberley was then called) in a wagon of the Diamond Fields Trust Company. On its first day's journey the wagon stopped at Ceres, where Barney Barnato obtained the free use of the Town Hall from Mr. Adolph Arnhols, who was then mayor, for a performance.

He gave similar performances in other places, notably Dutoitspan, and with the money he accumulated he took a Government claim then costing 10s. 6d. a year. Having found a few stones, he hired more claims, engaged more men and then started diamond buying. He still stuck to the stage, but became more ambitious and took leading parts in plays, contenting himself at last with no less a role that that of Othello.

His own description of his arrival at the Cape and how he became a millionaire, is as follows:—

"It is just 23 years ago since I, considered then a good-looking boy, landed at Cape Town, after a tedious journey of 27 and a half days, the greater part of which time I had spent building castles in the air and dreaming of the possibilities of the new world which I was approaching.

"Full of hope and confidence, I walked to the Masonic Hotel, and on the verandah was met by a gentleman, whose name I will ask you to allow me to withhold, but who, as I afterwards learnt, held the position of president of the Diamond Diggings.

"I was startled by the brilliancy of his shirt-front, on which there blazed three enormous diamond studs, one only of which would have made Pony Moore shed tears. As these only formed part of his jewelled adornments, I thought he must be a walking diamond mine.

"He spoke to me very kindly, though with rather a patronising air, asking me my name and destination. I told him my name was Barney Barnato, and that I was going up to the Diamond Fields to join my brother, and, as I hoped, to make my fortune.

"A look of sympathy, almost of pity, suffused his face, and, placing his hand in a fatherly manner on my shoulder, he said: 'Go home again, my boy, for I have cleared that country of all the gems it contains.' And, looking at the sparkling brilliants which shone out from every possible part of him, I was almost convinced that his statement was true.

"I was too proud to let the tears of disappointment fall, and stood wondering what would be said to me if I returned home to admit that I had been on a wild goose chase. This was sufficient to make me adhere to my original intention, whatever the result might be, so I determined to go and book my seat on the coach, which was leaving the next morning, lest anything else should occur to make me waver.

"This year — 23 years after my interview with him — I met in the market square at Johannesburg this same gentleman, who had cleared the country of all the gems it contained, and on my reminding him of the incident, he asked: 'How did you discover the De Beers Diamond Mines and become a life Governor of the company?'

"I replied: "By not taking your advice to go home again'."

It is not necessary here to follow Mr. Barnato's further progress in accumulating a stupendous fortune. We may mention that he had boasted of having the responsibility cast upon him of being entrusted with the entire management of concerns representing £40,000,000 of capital.

Mr. Barnato still found time to attend to politics. In 1888, during the fierce struggle for the representation of the people, he was returned at the head of the poll as a member for Kimberley by a majority of three-fourths of the voters. He defeated no less a personage than Mr. Cecil Rhodes, and carried with him three men who had declared for his policy. At that time Kimberley was the only constituency, excepting Cape Town, which returned four members.

In 1893, after he had spent some time in England, he was re-elected on the same lines as in 1888. In the Transvaal his influence was very great; and he had the ear of President Kruger, who was much guided during recent troubles by his advice.

The funeral will leave No. 6 Marble Arch on Sunday for Willesden Cemetery, where Mr. Barnato has a reserved grave. No flowers by request.

• CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS •

A delegation was received in Ottawa by the Hon. Davie Fulton, Minister of Justice, and David Walker, Q.C., M.P., at a joint conference at the Minister's office at Parliament Buildings. The submission confined itself to the question of pre-slaughter handling of animals. The delegation reiterated opposition to any blanket prohibition of shackling and hoisting without adequate objective and scientific proof as to the inhumaneness of this procedure. It pointed out that it is the contention that such evidence has until now not been presented and that the delegation did not think it should be assumed that shackling and hoisting per se are inhumane. The delegation further pointed out that the so-called Weinberg Pen has been tested in Canada and rejected by leading abattoirs as impractical and not acceptable. Mention was made of the study of handling methods preparatory to Shechita undertaken in the U.S.A. by the Joint Advisory Committee of the Synagogue Council of America and National Community Relations Advisory Council. The Canadian Jewish Congress is associated with this study. A copy of the statement announcing the study was left with the Minister. The statement indicates that the purpose of the study is "to ascertain the most humane practical methods of preparing animals for Jewish religious slaughter and to develop the equipment and process necessary for such purpose. Should this scientific research and study disclose more humane mechanical methods of handling, we will recommend the alteration or modification of any present method. If, however, such scientific research should indicate that any one of the present methods of handling is humane then there would be no reason for making changes".

● HOSPITAL OF HOPE ●

The women of the Units raised almost half of the hospital's non-operating income last year, reported Mrs. M. Pinsky, president of the Council of Units, at the annual donor luncheon, at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel. An estimated amount of $50,000 raised during the year just closed, brought the total sum contributed to the hospital by the Units to more than $550,000. An amount unprecedented by any hospital Auxiliary of a similar membership. Mrs. Pinsky praised the project committees, with these chairmen: Mesdames L. Lom, L. Goldenberg, H. Bercovitch, H. Mendelsohn, S. Cohen, H. Oberfield, H. B. Tanenbaum, J. Jacobson, B. Adelson. Additional money was raised by individual Units at teas, money showers, musicales, etc. In her report Mrs. Pinsky paid special tribute to the Hospital visiting committee, Mrs. H. Zrill and Mrs. A. Weiskop, and to the festival committee, chairman, Mrs. S. Cohen, who organized concerts, parties, gifts, and observance of festivals for the patients. The Chai patroness project, whereby a woman is unable to participate in the hospital work, but could become a patroness for $18 annually, had fallen short of its objective. Mrs. Pinsky appealed to members to "sell" the idea to women outside of the hospital "family". All monies raised were given directly for the maintenance of indigents who comprised 70% of hospital patients. Facilities of the physiotherapy department which were of value to the long-term, chronically ill patients, were proving beneficial to patients released from other hospitals as well. The new slate of officers, presented by Mrs. H. Bercovitch, chairman of nominations, is: Mrs. J. R. Bogante; Mrs. S. Cohen; president, Mrs. M. Pinsky; Mesdames H. Oberfield, H. Bercovitch, H. B. Tanenbaum, H. Tulin, E. Goldstein, M. Singerman, M. Dwire, J. Issen, R. Marcovitch, J. Issen, P. W. Cohen, E. Wohl, H. Oberfield, L. Goldenberg, I. Kanofsky, S. Zaracoff, J. Jacobson, B. Adelson, S. Alrod, L. Lom, H. Tulin, L. Goldenberg, H. Zrill, A. Weiskop. Head table guests included: J. R. Bogante, Q.C., president of the Hospital, and Mrs. J. R. Bogante, honorary president of the Council of Units; Manuel Cohen, executive director of the Hospital; Mrs. Sylva Lamothe, president of the Quebec Hospital Auxiliaries; conveners for the donor luncheon, Mrs. Israel Kanofsky, Mrs. T. Cooper; and officers and presidents of the Units. A musical skit, "Who Will Be Our President?", in which members of the Units participated, was written by Mrs. David Ritchie, directed by Mrs. Charles Friedman, and accompanied by Mrs. L. Arthur Simon at the piano. Members of the cast were: Mesdames M. W. Pinsky, P. W. Cohen, H. Tulin, G. Shore, A. S. Blauer, G. Silverman, H. Stroll, M. Schachtar, A. Pinsky, I. Steinberg, J. Levin, H. Bercovitch, R. Davine. The Jewish Hospital of Hope is the only English-speaking, non-sectarian hospital for chronically ill, long-term patients in the Province of Quebec. The skit with additional musical and comedy entertainment, will be presented by the Council of Units at Shaare Zedek Synagogue, on June 23, at 8:30 p.m.

Hospital. He published more than sixty scientific papers.

An expert on the Djuka, the Bush Negroes of Dutch Guiana, he led several expeditions to that country partly to collect specimens of native arts and crafts for the American Museum of Natural History and partly to study tuberculosis among the Bush Negroes. His book, "Djuke," appeared in 1931.

During World War 1, Dr. Kahn was chief bacteriologist in a Navy laboratory. He served with the Office of Strategic Services during World War II. His decorations included the Order of Manuel de Cespedes (Cuba) and the Order of Orange Nassau (the Netherlands).

At St. Vincent's, Dr. Kahn had been conducting experiments on the resistant staphylococcus bacteria, says the New York Times. He had recently read a paper on the subject before a meeting of the New York Medical Society in Buffalo.

Dr. Kahn was a past president of the New York branch of the Society of American Bacteriologists. He was a member of many professional groups, among them the Society for Experimental Biology and Medicine, the New York Academy of Medicine, the American Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene and the American Society of Parasitologists.

He also was an honorary life member of the American Museum of Natural History, a member of the Explorers' Club and an honorary member of the Cuban Academy of Medicine.

Surviving are a son, Morton C. Jr., and a sister, Mrs. Joseph Steiner, both of New York.

mathematics and prepare himself for a career of college teaching. His particular aptitude for the subject is demonstrated by his high school program. "When I began high school, they put me in an accelerated Algebra class, but I knew the material, so I took an accelerated geometry course," he explained. "After that I just took the Regents exams each year."

Like other youngsters, David is still worried about his final report card. 'I'm rather anxious," he conceded, "about my marks in shop and drawing. But I guess I'll pass all right." Among his other educational pursuits is the study of Hebrew and Jewish literature and history at the College of Jewish Studies at 3080 Broadway.

And when he's not spending time with his father, Dr. Bernard Segal, a rabbi and executive director of the United Synagogue of America, his mother and sister, he works on his hobby, says the New York Times. It is the study of streetcar companies and collecting transit transfers.

IN MEMORIAM

SCHWARTZ: In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Anna Wise Schwartz, who passed away on Sivan 23, 1958.

We lost a mother with a heart of gold,
Who was more to us than wealth untold.
Without farewell, she fell asleep.
We have lost, but God has gained,
One of the best mothers, the world contained.
For we never knew a heartache,
Till we saw her vacant chair.

Sadly missed by husband, Joseph; and daughters, Jean, Claire, Bella, Sayra; and sons-in-law; and grandchildren.

Present Day Problems Of Aging: A Challenge

BY DR. E. DAVID SHERMAN, F.A.C.P.,
CO-PHYSICIAN-IN-CHIEF, MONTREAL HEBREW OLD PEOPLE'S AND SHELTERING HOME

At the zenith of Greco-Roman civilization, as far as we can tell from available statistics, life expectancy at birth was 25 to 27 years. Considering the abysmal state of health in the Middle Ages it is doubtful that, from the conquests of Alaric to the Renaissance, Western Europeans enjoyed even this average. By the beginning of the 19th century, this figure had been advanced to about 35 years. From the time of Socrates until the threshold of the present century, man continued to fulfill the lament of the ancient Chinese poet, Po-Chu-I.

"Like fallen leaves — they — tumbled to the Nether Springs
All vanished ere their middle years were passed."

Two thousand years had brought no more than 10 years increase in the average length of human life, that is, for each 200 years of history, only about one year was added to the life span. Then, in the 19th century, the curve of longevity began to rise at an accelerating pace. By 1850, man could look forward to 39 years of age, by 1900 to nearly 49.7 years. With each decade of our present century, progress has continued.

In 1910, life expectancy went up to 51.9 years; in 1920 to 57 years; in 1930 to 61 years; in 1940 to 65 years; and by 1950, to 69 years. Today, life expectancy is still higher, preliminary figures indicating that it is now over 70 years. In other words, during this last half century, there has been an average increase of about five years for every decade; that is, for every elapsed year, the average length of life has increased by about six months.

Today there are about 175 million persons in the world who are over 60 years of age or more. They constitute about seven percent of all human inhabitants of Earth. They outnumber all persons living in the United States or in all of South America. This phenomenon represents one of the great new developments in world population history. Never before in recorded history of man have so many people lived to such ripe maturity.

It is ironic that just as man has developed unique explosives that threaten to assure that man does not live out his years, human beings through advances in science have never had so good a chance of living out their years.

Another historic marker in man's history has been reached. Man not only has unparalleled opportunity to live longer, but perhaps of greater significance, man today stands on the threshold of liberating the latent talents of old age, and of opening up new opportunities and new challenges in his later years, and of offering man opportunity in his later years for personal, inner enrichment, creativity and satisfaction. Social security in many parts of the world has created a new "leisure class" and new psychological findings are putting a new face on old age, not with the drastic speed of plastic surgery, but with the slow, steady progress of education which is easing pessimism and despair in old age, reducing uselessness, and pointing the way to making the final chapter of life a true climax.

And while the problems of the aged of the world may differ in intensity, increasing evidence, as indicated at the International Gerontological Conference at London in 1954, is accumulating that basically the problems of aged humans are the same around the world. They require the basic commodities to exist—food, clothing, and shelter. But in whatever culture they may be, they also need emotional sustenance and self-esteem. They need medical care and health maintenance, and in most cultures, usefulness in one form or another, whether by work, service to the family or otherwise.

The magnitude and diversity of the problems of an aging population have been studied in the United States with increasing interest and concern by the medical profession, the public, the State and Federal governmental agencies. There have been many local, national, and international congresses and conferences on aging. Societies, national committees on aging, counseling services, and even gerontological study tours have been established. Medical journals on Geriatrics are in existence for the past 10 years. Incidentally, The Journal of Gerontology carries as its by-line slogan, "To add life to years, not just years to life."

Besides medical journals, there are many books written for professional and lay consumption. The tremendous extent of the literature can be appreciated when note is taken that 18,036 references were listed in 1951 by Dr. Nathan Shock, in "A Classified Bibliography of Gerontology and Geriatrics." To this number Shock has added 14,033 references between April, 1950, and April, 1955. To say that there is increased awareness that problems of an aging population exist is a gross understatement.

The problems are by no means limited to the biological sciences and clinical medicine, as the social, economic, and environmental aspects are of equal importance. Too often the public assigns the problems of an aging population to the medical profession, and the physician may be too busy to appreciate the geriatric patient as an individual, with as many, or more, social and economic problems than medical. Physicians will be and should be asked for advice and guidance by patients, employers, vocational counselors, and the public. The medical profession should be concerned with the problems of aging beyond their purely health aspects. Anticipating old age with assurance calls for good health, good financial security, good social adjustment, and a receptive environment. A total approach to a many-faceted problem is obligatory.

That we are rapidly "living out the later years of life" and "adding years to life" is borne out statistically by the Dicennial Censuses and statistical abstracts of the United States and the studies of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. For more than a century the average length of life in the United States (as well as Canada) has been steadily increasing.

In 1850, the expectation of life at birth was less than 40 years, with approximately one million individuals over 60 years of age. By 1954 life expectancy has risen to 70 years and the population over 60 years is 18 million. It is estimated that in 1955 there were almost 14 million over 65 years of age and by 1975 there will be 21 million such individuals. Two out of three men now over 20 years of age and more than four out of every five women are expected to survive beyond their 65th birthday. We are truly confronted with an age of the aged.

The causes of the increased longevity can be easily traced to:

1. Higher living standards with better nutrition, better food, better clothing, shorter working hours, and better recreational facilities.
2. Public Health measures with safe water, safe milk, food inspection, and sewage disposal.
3. Effective control over disease of environmental origin, the common infectious diseases of childhood, and improved infant and maternal mortality.
4. Better hospitals and diagnostic methods and facilities and improved medical education.
5. The greater skill and knowledge of the members of the health services, physicians, dentists, nurses and laboratory technicians.

The composition and characteristics of our "senior citizens", are also important to appreciate. Currently white men at 65 years of age can look forward to about 13 years on the average and white women to 15 additional years. Population trends show an increasing total percentage of persons over 65 years; 1955 was 8.5%, and in 1975 the anticipation is a 9.4%. The present sex ratio of those over 65 years shows 116 females for every 100 males, and by 1975 the estimate is 137.8 females per 100 males. More than half of older women are widowed, and 25% of men are widowers.

Twenty per cent of this age group spend their later years in living arrangements apart from their families and relatives. The educational background of those over 65 years shows only 30% have had more than a grade school education and about 20% have had less than five years of formal schooling. Only 45% of men over 65 years of age are now employed and only 10% of women. These figures point up to a tremendous manpower pool that is unproductive, a dependent group without husband or wife, without education, without economic security, without protection of the family group and living accommodations. This presents an overwhelming enigma to the individual and to society.

The problems of old age are not new or unique in the United States or Canada. The classical reference is to Cicero's "De Senectude", written about 40 B.C., when Cicero was 63 years of age in an age when the average length of life was only 22 years. Cicero had little patience with those who lamented old age and noted that those with simple desires and good dispositions find old age easy to take. One of the speeches in the discourse expresses Cicero's views:

"You will do us a very great favor if . . . you would allow us to learn from you, in good time before it arrives, by what methods one may most easily acquire the strength to support the burden of advancing age." The old, being rare in primitive society, were highly respected phenomena. When communication was restricted to word of mouth, the wide experience of the elderly made them the repository of important knowledge and the most valued members of a group.

In the past century old age in the Western Hemisphere has lost respect and sympathy. Old age has been deprived of its rarity, and the rapidly changing technology in an industrial era has devaluated experience. Hauser, points out, also, that the transition from a rural to an urban society with "its diversity of social worlds, racial and ethnic groups, languages, institutions, economic levels, patterns of conduct and thought . . . undermines the importance of the role of the senior citizen as the carrier of the tradition of experience and wisdom."

The present-day home scarcely accommodates a two-generation family let alone three-generations and thereby fails to provide the security and familiarity of a home setting to its aged members. All the major factors associated with a good adjustment in old age . . . love, affection, security, suitable housing, intellectual and physical occupation for mind and body, companionship, and probably above all, a sense of being understood, appreciated, and wanted, are threatened.

TREND TO LIBERAL JUDAISM

youth arm of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

The founder and principal of the school is Dr. Max Eik, a pupil of Rabbi Baeck. Dr. Eik organized the school in 1939 with sixteen pupils. Today, its elementary school has 860 students and its high school 160. This educator and liberal rabbinical leader believes that Orthodoxy, as taught in the nation's Orthodox network of schools, discourages youthful interest.

He maintains that religion must be taught for "its ethical, spiritual, and human values." The concept enters into the whole curriculum of the Leo Baeck School. Dr. Eik has taught his students to find in the Jewish holidays "the ethical and spiritual significance of the Prophets of Israel." He believes that while Israel's youth should be deeply familiar with the history of the Jews the world over, they should not necessarily be expected to follow the customs, folkways, and traditions that Jews developed "in the ghettos of Europe."

Israel, he emphasized, can develop new customs and traditions "but these must have significance to the needs of the people they serve." As for the future of liberal Judaism, Dr. Eik declared that the liberal synagogue "will differ, surely, from that in England or America."

"It will be more steeped," he told the New York Times, "in tradition as it will always draw anew from the traditional sources. On the other hand, the liberal synagogue will be far less rigid than the Orthodox, and will choose from the sources what appeals to heart and minds. Its teacher or rabbi will interpret the present out of the eternal values and thus uplift people from their daily trials and troubles into a higher sphere."
